NFL DRAFT TEAM EVALUATIONS

	2009 DRAFT	NEW YORK JETS B
PICK NO.	PLAYER	COMMENTS	POS	HEIGHT	WEIGHT	SCHOOL
5	MARK SANCHEZ	I am still a bit skeptical that SANCHEZ has the tools to be drafted this high, and become a Franchise QB, but between the ears he gets it. And his personality makes him a natural for the Big Apple. The JETS just added a million area Hispanics to their a fan base. He will be the biggest personality on this team since Joe Willie. I'm just not convinced that on the field he will be more than the second coming of CHAD.	QB	6'2	227	SOUTHERN CAL
65	SHONN GREENE	The heir apparent for the recalcitrant THOMAS JONES. His strong running style should help them establish the ground game even further and take some of the burden off of SANCHEZ to throw 30 times a game. He will compliment WASHINGTON quite nicely. A bull of a runner, but I see the dancing feet of BETTIS at times.	RB	5'11	227	IOWA
193	MATT SLAUSON	A recruit of BILL CALLAHAN at Nebraska who had a solid senior season, capped by a nice effort in the Shrine Game. His size is impressive and his athleticism is at least adequate. He could be groomed to replace FANECA in a year or two. Good value at this slot.	OG	6'5	315	NEBRASKA

The short and sweet of this DRAFT is SANCHEZ, with GREENE as an asterisk. The JETS will roll with the PR of this event until September when the footballs fly in earnest. If SANCHEZ struggles there will be hell to pay in the tough AFC East. GREENE may allow them to cut ties with JONES rather than fork out big bucks. They did go out and sign an excellent group of RFA so that may help the lack of volume here. SANCHEZ better work, and now, because they probably sent their best veteran QB to the BROWNS in RATLIFF.
