

NFL DRAFT TEAM EVALUATIONS

2009 DRAFT		SEATTLE SEA HAWKS C-
PICK NO.	PLAYER	COMMENTS	POS	HEIGHT	WEIGHT	SCHOOL
4	AARON CURRY	The safest Prospect in the DRAFT falls into the lap of one of the more conservative DRAFTERS; should be a very happy marriage. And CURRY has monster potential. He is very athletic, football smart, and dedicated. If he doesn't start right away it is a bad omen for the new Coaching regime of JIM MORA.	OLB	6'2	256	WAKE FOREST
49	MAX UNGER	He is versatile and he is talented. He will fit their blocking schemes very well. He does need to get stronger especially in the upper body. He had a severely underdeveloped musculature at he Senior Bowl weigh-in.	OT/C	6'5	309	OREGON
91	DEON BUTLER	A real burner and a solid football player. He will help at WR and also in the return game. He might provide them with what the oft-injured DEON BRANCH was supposed to bring to the table. Nice slot receiver to compliment T.J.	WR/RS	5'11	183	PENN STATE
178	MIKE TEEL	Alrighty then...people work with me here and explain a Pick being used on this very inconsistent college QB. Sorry, this Pick makes no sense to me. TEEL is too stiff and erratic for the NFL. Oh, and his arm is average at best.	QB	6'3	221	RUTGERS
245	COURTNEY GREENE	This Rutgers guy is well worth a Seventh Round selection. He was highly touted after solid Soph & Jr seasons, then disappeared under a new DB Coach for half of the 2008 season. He showed signs of his old self late and he could he developed.	S	6'1	212	RUTGERS
247	NICK REED	I guess this Pick is OK with a R7 Compensatory Pick. It's hard to figure exactly where REED fits in an NFL Defense. But he is a high motor, high energy guy who just makes plays...including lots of sacks.	E/LB	6'1	247	OREGON
248	CAMERON MORRAH	Certainly worthy of a shot in the last 10 Picks of he entire DRAFT. Shows good hands ad may be more of an H-Back than an NFL TE. He has potential ad can certainly catch the ball. He' ll have to be taught to block.	TE	6'4	244	CALIFORNIA

They didn't blunder around (except for TEEL) and got some serviceable players in need areas. CURRY has the potential to be a star. In fact if CURRY isn't a star, and soon, then he fooled a lot of us badly. I do think that football is still a big man's game and it bothers me a bit that there isn't much beef in this SEA HAWKS Draft. The only true down-lineman taken was UNGER who is a finesse player right now. This is the epitome of a C Grade DRAFT. The (-) in my grade for them comes from reaching for TEEL.